Balances and Builds Healthy Adrenal Function

Pet's adrenal systems are more challenged and stressed than ever before, and many health imbalances and hyperactive behavior in pets stem from adrenal glands that are either exhausted or struggling to produce adrenaline.

If your pet is exhibiting low physical energy, blue moods, and recurring tendencies to get sick, it could be a sign that your pet is experiencing a form of adrenal exhaustion, often the result of exposure to long-term stress, which can seriously affect many aspects of health. Conversely, if your pet is experiencing spikes of anxiousness and nervous behavior that seem out of character, he may be experiencing adrenal imbalance, a common precursor to adrenal exhaustion.

The adrenal glands are at the center of a pet's primal "fight or flight" stress response. They release adrenaline into the bloodstream in response to stress of any form. The adrenal glands also release hormones that help your pet's body deal with stress, tissue repair, and maintain blood pressure. When stress is sustained, the cardiovascular, endocrine, and immune system become distressed.

For many pets, their adrenal glands have been working in overdrive or been under stress for so long that the adrenals themselves become exhausted, which causes fatigue, raw nerves, anxiousness, and a general breakdown of health.

Adaptogenic herbs, those that help a pet's body adapt to stress, and nervine herbs, those that soothe the nerves, are very important to helping the adrenal system recover.

Pet's Adreno•Aid™ is natural herbal support with both adaptogenic and nervine herbs that is formulated to rebuild, balance, and support the adrenal glands. These herbs provide necessary minerals and herbal source vitamins that are rich in adrenal sustaining components. This special combination of herbs also helps to relieve anxiousness and rebuild the nervous system.
